Originally trained as a sociologist, Suzanne discovered photography after breaking her back in a boating accident. After a long rehabilitation and learning to walk again, she went on to become an accomplished photographer with a profound interest in cultures and civilisations, working to bring awareness to social issues with humanitarian organisations such as WaterAid, CARE, and Médecins Sans Frontières.

Tipped as a 'Shooting Star' by the British Journal of Photography, Suzanne's work has graced the covers of international newspapers and travel magazines. Balanced between fine art and editorial, she has enjoyed numerous exhibitions including at the British Museum and the iconic hotel La Mamounia, in Marrakech now has a floor dedicated to her work.

In 2004, Suzanne bought a crumbling riad in the ancient Marrakech medina and based herself there, since when she has also offered select photography tours in Morocco.

At the start of 2019, after many hours discussing the difficulties of finding reliable photography tours, Suzanne launched clik-trip to fill a gap she saw in the market enabling photography enthusiasts to find workshops and photography tours all over the world.

Now living in France, Suzanne divides her time between finding amazing photographers who want to offer their skills on clik-trip and her personal photography work. But she still finds time to offer a few tours each year in Morocco, a country which has captured her heart.
